Hunt at St. Marks.

St. Marks, July 1: Two men in a boat just above the old fort on the St. Marks river saw a large bear swimming and chased him some distance, finally overtaking him, when a blow with an oar gashed his head, another with a club blinded him, and a third blow with an axe so enraged his bearship that he turned on his pursuers, biting "Doc" Sandberry's hand and scratching his face. The animal was finally lassoed and drowned.

Reduced Fire Rates.

The council committee which visited Atlanta last week to confer with the Southeastern Tariff association, returned to the city and made report that the association, while pleased with improvements recently made in our fire department, would require, before any reduction of rates of insurance could be ordered, that the city put in six more hydrants on Monroe street, adopt and install an automatic fire alarm system and provide its own horses for use with the hook and ladder apparatus. The estimated cost of these additions is about $5,000, but the reduction in rates consequent upon their adoption is regarded as well worth the expenditure.

At Lanark Inn.

Editor True Democrat: The man, woman or child who goes to Lanark, spends a day, and does not report a good time, has something wrong with the constitution.

The hotel has all of the modern equipments, the service is entirely satisfactory and the fare surpasses expectation. The house is well screened, keeping out all insects, and allowing guests to sit on the many broad verandahs in perfect comfort and complete protection.

When the fresh water bathing pool, now under construction, has been finished, the attraction will be doubled, and the person who once visits Lanark will be sure to go again—and again.

A WELL-PLEASED GUEST.

Citizens' Mass Meeting.

Pursuant to a call made by Mayor Henderson, quite a large meeting of citizens was held in the council chamber Monday evening, to consider Tallahassee's obligations with reference to the provision of a site for a governor's mansion and the location of the several State institutions of learning by the educational boards. These two matters came up in the order above named, and after choosing Mayor Henderson to preside over the assemblage, and Mr. G. T. Whitfield to act as its secretary, the meeting listened to appropriate and effective remarks from Hon. W. A. Rawls, Mr. J. A. Edmondson, Dr. W. L. Moor and others. The last named gentleman argued against the use of any public park or square for the purpose, and moved for the appointment of a committee to act in procuring a suitable site. The motion was carried and the committee was appointed by the chairman, as follows: Messrs. W. L. Moor, Aaron Levy and George E. Lewis.

The matter of college location was then considered, and after a spirited debate a motion for a committee to attend the Board of Control and represent the claims and interests of Tallahassee was adopted and the chairman later appointed as such committee the following: Hon. Fred T. Myers, Messrs. W. R. Wilson, Jno. L. Neeley and T. H. Randolph, to which were added, by motion, Leon county's legislative representatives, Senator Geo. P. Raney and Representatives Rawls and Robison.

The meeting thereupon adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.

Home Comfort Range.

Last week we took occasion to call public attention to the fact that a range company, with five wagons was canvassing this section, selling ranges on the installment plan at $65, and adding that our home dealers would sell as cheap or cheaper on the same terms. That it pays to advertise in The True Democrat is daily proven from the fact that in a very few hours after the paper was circulated readers began to comment on the notices and on Monday morning our office was visited by a very genial gentleman, who with his wife are guests of the Leon hotel, Mr. A. G. Reynolds, superintendent of the Home Comfort Wrought Iron Range Co. After contracting with us for an eight inch advertisement and some space for reading notices, he casually but pleasantly mentioned the notice we gave his business in our last issue, and said that one part of our statement was particularly true, that his fine salesmen had sold 18 ranges in one day, but that we had erred in stating that the ranges were cheap, a fake, or a swindle; that they were offering on the market the strongest, best built range, "The Home Comfort," manufactured by the Wrought Iron Range Co., of St. Louis, Mo., which has captured awards at all the great expositions and all small expositions and fairs, all over the country; and that the ranges were absolutely guaranteed to be the strongest and best on the market; and he produced many testimonials to bear him out in the statement.

He then invited us to go and inspect his ranges, that he and his salesmen might show us their many good qualities and cooking utensils which go with it. Of course we had to comply with his request and did so. To make a long story short, we went, and saw, and were surprised at what we did see. The range was explained, and proved to be made of the strongest and best materials, and the test made in our presence by Mr. D. G. Heyder, one of the salesmen of the company, proved conclusively that it would be next to impossible, with ordinary care, to break any part of the range. He hammered the range with a hatchet, banged the parts and pieces over the wagon wheels, as he did the utensils, and they all stood the test.

Mr. Reynolds then had a range carried to our home, where Mr. Heyder put it up and after explaining it thoroughly to our people, it was put to work and thoroughly tested as to cooking heat and its good cooking qualities. He then made us another proposition for advertising space which we had to accept, and which largely increases the space first contracted for. His advertisement will be found in this issue, and at times during the next two months, he, through testimonials of those using the range, will continue to tell you of the good qualities of the Home Comfort Range. The company has no middle men. All ranges are sold from the wagon by regularly employed salaried salesmen. All ranges are sold alike and all on the same terms.

Mr. J. M. Lutz left on Saturday last for Baltimore for the summer.
